DIRECTOR'S

NOTES

Miriam Garlo is my sister. She's an actress and she is deaf. A few years ago, she started thinking about becoming a mum. We talked about it a lot and she shared her fears and expectations about being a mother in a world made by and for the hearing. From those conversations, came the short film Sorda (Deaf), which left me with the feeling that there was still so much of Ángela's story left to tell.

The feature film comes from that desire to take a deeper dive into the complexity of the relationship between the deaf and hearing worlds: engagement and disengagement, connection and love, but also clashes and conflicts... something that, as Miriam's sister, has been a fundamental part of my life and which, still today, after spending our whole lives together, continues to change shape and present challenges, like a mystery that needs to be constantly unraveled. And so it follows that Miriam and I are always saying how, without realising it, we've spent our whole lives preparing to make this film.

This is where the character of Héctor comes from. A kind of copy of me, he loves Ángela and is always by her side, but when the baby arrives, the bubble they had built to protect themselves from their differences is suddenly burst. Or Elvira and Fede, those parents who just want the best for their daughter, but who don't understand her and feel alien to the way she experiences her deafness and lives in the world. And in order to get a more in-depth understanding of motherhood within the deaf community, I interviewed deaf women who shared with me their experiences of pregnancy, birth and then raising their children.

This film doesn't aim to be a thesis on deafness. I've never thought of Ángela as a representative of the deaf community, but rather as a woman who's finding her way through motherhood, who's trying to deal with the problems that are arising in her relationship, who has a difficult relationship with her parents and who wants her baby girl to know who she is and to love her... and who, besides all this, is deaf. Ángela is ready for the world, but the world isn't yet ready for her.

MIRIAM GARLO'S

NOTES

Throughout my whole life, I have never felt that the representations we tend to see of deafness coincide with my experience, or reflect the richness and complexity of it. Even when the typical clichés are avoided, deaf characters always seem to be constructed to “show” the hearing world what being deaf is like.

My sister (Eva Libertad) and I have spent our whole lives reflecting on and sharing our feelings around the complexity of being deaf in this world, and it is from precisely this place that Ángela was born. We wanted a protagonist who owned her world and her experience in it. Strong and fragile at the same time. A woman who fights not to give in to life's adversities, but who is also full of contradictions, which inevitably come to the fore with even more force when she becomes a mother. My work as an actress has, on the one hand, been to construct the biographical, emotional and mental sides of Ángela, which meant making her feelings and life experiences as a woman and a deaf person my own. In other words, I had to form her concrete identity and that which makes her unique. Then, on the other hand, we focused on the more technical side of finding her voice, the way she enunciates and how well she can lip read, which constitute Ángela's ways of communicating with the world and which are different from my own.

ÁLVARO CERVANTES'

NOTES

Shortly after starting rehearsals on this film, I understood that as much as a hearing person might try to adapt to the deaf universe, a deaf person will always be the one who has to make that extra effort in our hearing world.

I am so grateful to Sorda (Deaf) for making me aware of a reality that is, so often, left invisible. My profound thanks to Eva Libertad and Miriam Garlo, a duo who have been gifted with the most extraordinary intelligence and sensibility.
